The whole thing takes commercial television for a ride, and doesn't bother to bring it back. The result is terrific.

Tashlin, long recognised as one of Hollywood's top creators of comedy, and the acknowledged master of the comedy device known as the 'sight gag,' packed, "Oh, for a Man!" with such gags as a big French poodle who changes his colour and wardrobe to at Miss Mansfield's changes; a series of comedy TV commercials in which, for instance, a door falls off a car under the caress of an enthusinstic car-salesman; and pop-corn popping in Tony Randall's pocket when he is embraced by Jayne Mansfield,

Clever Touch

I like all that kind of fun as well as the next, but the really elever touch is Tashlin's evaluation of success, and the stuffy little vanities that men reckon success. Here, if I may say so, in philosophical raspherry for all those funny little men who in-flict their insufferable vanity appon the minor denizens of the business world.

In this film, Hunter is the living parody of all such, and his great moment is the privilege of using the executive's tollet. Quite honestly, I consider it satire of the highest order, because it is introduced in such a robust everyday manner. The rest of the credit must go to the striking lack of sympathy"

I think we might say that Jayne Mansfield's success is that she parodies her type. ### News From Britain

: ARMOUR

once the almost legendhero of the Labour Party, and now, certainly, grand old man of Socialism, has been giving his colleagues a searching

He has been digesting the party's manifesto on ownership and he has discovered, at least once, what he call "a striking lack of sympathy with the consumer."

These are hard words and he backs them by examining the party's policy on the coal is dustry. He concedes -- as everyone does-that the mining industry had a duty to stop the "old crude evils" which afflicted the miners.

But he notes that constant increases in coal prices have hit the domestic consumer hard: "Mercly to say in such circumstances British coal is by far the cheapest in Western Europe and coal is used with wasteful extravagance in Eritain' reads rather like brutal indifference to the consumer."

No Answer

Socialist theoreticians, of course, have been mulling over this problem for quite a time and Mr Morrison's comments are merely strong evidence that there is considerable dissatisfaction in the party over the fact that no answer seems to have been forthcoming,

The problem is that any politleal party's policy must, in the end, be tailored to meet the demands of popular pressure. Voters are strongly organised into producer groups, That applies to management and

But nowhere is there-or is there likely to be-any strong organisation of consumers capuble of exerting political pressure. Nor is it easy to convince voters that the policies they demand as producers are likely to hurt them as consumers,

In any nationalised industry, there are two forces to be placated: the government, which mural by Picasso and demands production of a certain sort, and trade unions, who are in a position to fix wages and conditions.

Governments are in a particuly vulnerable position when trade unions take the offensive -even though the control of nationalised industries is formally in the hands of quasiindependent boards. If they yield to the trade unions, they may annoy the consumers, but, if they do not, the resultant mdustrial strife will almost certainly annoy many more voters.

It is partly for this reason that Mr Gaitskell is continuing to campaign vigorously—despite considerable opposition-for his plan to abandon outright nationalisation as a future policy and substitute the purchase of stock and selected to go with its in private companies.

In this way, the public should he able to enjoy some of the proceeds of successful industry without becoming a necessarily weak party to industrial disputes.

Solution

The Archbishop of Canterbury has come up with a solution to the problem of inflation,

The problem, he says, is really a "moral" one and the solution is to be found in "honest work, thrift, unselfishness, service to one another, instead of strife."

The difficulty, as the political scientists and the economists point out, is that the Archbishop is both right and wrong.

Greed and gluttony, the two sins of economic man, are, of course, at the bottom of the problem. So, Indeed, is that little mentioned deadly sin

But the difficulty is that the great forces which shape a modern industrial society are impersonal. economic system under which we live is founded upon competition. The trade union movement exists entirely to exert industrial force. The assumption that that force is needed is the whole reason for its existence. Before the Archbishop's advice could be heeded the whole of the economic organisation would have to be altered radically.

And the trouble is that no other economic system seems to have come any nearer to achieving the Kingdom of Heaven.

One man against the mob. and the ery is Vengeance

A MONG the duties of the Resident Commissioner in the Gilbert Islands was the settlement of strikes among the labourers employed by the British Phosphato Commissioners on Ocean Island. These disputes were frequent, and often arose through the animosity between the native Gilbertese Islanders and the hundreds of imported Chinese coolies, Between yellow and brown there was constant friction; and for many years only a small railway line used for the transport of phosphate separated the Chinese compound from the living quarters of the Gilbertese.

That was not nearly enough for peace of mind between two races of men who withdrew from each other every evening, savage from having had to work cheek by jowl throughout the day.

For an Oriental, deeply sensitive to loss of physical dignity, the schoolboy horseplay of the islanders—the upsetting of a wheelbarrow, the spilling of a paint pot, the jogging for the moment that I was Humane Society. of an elbow, the uproarious barging peting resident commissioner around—made his working day a and give all my time to police. # REPORT FROM WASHINGTON

All is not Lost in the US Unions

TR Walter Reuther, a shrewd man who runs the U.S. Auto Workers' Union and who is one of the great powers in the A.F.L.-C.I.O., has just decided that his men might be able to do without some money.

In any other country this might have got him locked up in a lunatic asylum. In the U.S. very few cycloshes were

It is reasonable to suppose that the spirit of Karl Marx, on hearing this, must have run off screaming into the outermost depths of Limbo; Mr Reuther's proposals merely confirm what everyone has known for a long time: U.S. trade unions believe in the capitalist system. Further-mere they know what their bellefs commit them to.

In the automobile business, supply has outrun demand by quite a distance. The logical answer is to cut prices. But the cost, of labour has made this virtually impossible and, trade unions being as strong as they are, this cost can only be cut with their consent.

Mr Reuther has therefore prices by a reasonable amount, his union will cut its wage demands for the forthcoming contract.

thinks this very strange. If the manufacturers can't sell cars, they can't pay wages. If they can sell cars, they can pay wages. Managements and unions are, in Mr Reuther's view, partners in · business. If is, therefore, foolish for one of them to seek to destroy the other.

So far, the automakers are considering the proposal. But if they turn it down, it will certainly not be because they think Mr Reuther has stepped outside his legitimate sphere of Influence, but because they different view of the market prospects—than—he does.

Crazy, ridiculous, extraordinary . . . . Call it what you will. But the fact remains that Britain is not likely to be represented at the European Swimming Championships in Budapest next year.

The reason? The Budapest date clashes with that of the 1958 National Championships at Blackpool in September.

So Britain, now richer in swimming talent than at any time in the past 30 years, may throw away an excellent chance of gaining some European titles.

UNWRITTEN LAWS

Are the unwritten laws of cricket too strictly observed? It would seem so when we look at a recent incident in the Yorkshire v Gloucestershire match. Yerkshire offspinner Ray Illingworth dismissed two batsmen with successive balls in the arst innings and had the chance of a hat-trick when Sam Cook, one of the game's "rabbits", came to the crease. But this was Cook's benefit match and custom decrees that the beneficiary should receive a "toffce" ball for his first delivery to get off the mark.

Illingworth gallantly obliged. Cook shared in a last wicket partnership of nine. Gloucestershire won the match by two wickets.

'CHARLTON SAYS HEWIE

By BERNARD JOY

If asked to pin-point the major weakness which caused Charlton to be relegated last season, I would say poor distribution. Even Stuart Leary, whom I rate second only to Johnny Haynes in making an accurate pass at speed, was often wide of his colleagues.

There will be no shortcomings this time. Charlton have made a fetish of fitness. Manager Jimmy Trotter himself is supervising and couch Jack Shreeve, the former full-back, is in charge of pressure training to spur players to greater efforts.

Superior fitness will lead to accurate passing, stamina, and self-confidence. If Charlton could have started last year with the team as it is now, they-would not have been relegated. During a quiet conversation in a club the other day I was intrigued by a question which one of the participants saw fit to throw into the round of talk. West's Error Sews Up Game

By OSWALD JACOBY

COUTH'S three-dlamond bid showed first-round control of the suit and was in the nature of a slam try. West stuck in n silly double that gave North a chance to pass.

This pass told South that North had no interest in a slam at all and South contented himself with a bid of four spades. South won the opening club lead with the ace and saw that even his game contract was doubtful. The way the cards lie South can bring it home by double dummy play against any defence but South succeeded in making five through an error by West,

He won the opening club lead and played a spade to dummy's king. He returned to Fortunately, you are sympathetic and understanding of the problems of others and you will not only fight your own battles successfully, but you seem able to help others do likewise. No WiTH 8 matter how complicated the situation, you seem to know stinctively the best way to unravel it. You have ambition, confidence and will power, and you know what you want out of life and go right out after it.

Genuine and sincere in your personal attachments, you will have a wide and varied group of acquaintances. Your really close friends, however, can be counted upon the fingers of one hand. To these few, your loyalties are unshakable. Your family tles are a strong influence, and your own kin can do no wrong. You have a good mind. Make full use of it! You are, at times, inclined to be mentally lazy, figuring that there is little need to extend yourself, since success comes to you without much effort.
